Rodrigo was angered that the American record company had used his music without permission. [15] In addition to the fact that he, as a composer, had not been asked for permission, "what he considered a violation of moral rights", Rodrigo Davis also tried to block the jazz and pop recordings of being released, before realizing, "In the end, the composer resigned to accept the fact that the pop versions reached a much larger audience than that of the classical music composers, and led to a much wider recognition of the classical concert to jazz". [18] She described how Rodrigo attempted to sue the SGAE in February 1967 at the Palace of Justice for authorizing the transcript of the Concierto by trumpet and jazz, which Davis recorded, but, "we lost the case, because the judge's opinion was that, since the record of Miles Davis had granted the rights of the authors to Joaquín, he had no further reparations against the SGAE." [19] Classicfm. with De Lucía stated in Paco de Lucía-Light and Shade: A Portrait that he gave greater emphasis to rhythmic accuracy in his Concierto interpretation at the expense of the perfect tone preferred by classic guitarists.
